Spirits of Western Diplomats Is Said to Be Much Higher

By Natalia Rene

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent) MOSCOW, Aug. 3 — (INS) — Tension over the Berlin crisis appeared COMPLAINTS CONTINUE considerably eased in Moscow today following the conference of western envoys with Soviet Premier Stalin

An improvement in relations between east and west seemed indicated by the high spirits of the western diplomats who talked for two hours last night with the Rus-

All parties involved maintained tight-lipped silence regarding the discussions believed to involve not only a settlement of the Berlin problem but also the entire German question and Europe as well.

A brief statement made after the conference which lasted from 9 p. m. until after 11 p. m., said that the talk was held in the Kremlin with Stalin in the presence of Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molo-

United States Ambassador Lieut. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith entered the Kremlin first, followed soon by Britain's special envoy, Frank Rob-

All three retired after their visit with Stalin to the American Embassy for further joint talks, after which they dispatched messages to their home governments.

Informed quarters in the Soviet capital saw a possibility that there may be one or even more conferences in the immediate future.

These quarters imparted the feeling that some progress had been ironing out of differences.

It was pointed out, however, that depends on reaction of the western powers to what was said by Stalin.

The struggle between Congress and the Chief Executive has been going on for many years. Neither of the two New Deal hoff, 779; Mrs. Wyatt, 755; Jack Presidents has made any serious effort to co-operate. President Roosevelt demanded that Congress "rubber-stamp" everything he asked. For some time he got away with this. Then Con- McCleary Residence Is gress revolted against him-on the Reorganization and Court Packing Bills. After that the battle was on. Frequently more than half the Democrats in Congress locked horns with their President, and voted against him.

When Truman became President, many observers thought that because he had served in the Senate, he would have some Mr. and Mrs. John McCleary for of Congress' point of view, and would work harmoniously with their son, William McCleary, who the legislative branch of government. Within six weeks after he became President, he saw a majority of the House of Representatives (though not the necessary two-thirds) vote to over-ride his veto (of the Farm-Draft Bill). Since then he has vetoed more important bills, probably, than any other President in a similar period of time—and seen more of them re-passed with his own party members in Congress helping shove them down his throat.

Behind these vetoes was the fact that President Truman has never seen fit to consult with Congress, or his own party leaders there. Innumerable decisions or demands upon Congress have been made by President Truman without even advance notice over lack of action locally on mo- to Congressional spokesmen—let alone with them having a WOUNDED FOUR TIMES chance to offer criticisms and suggestions.

Treasurer

The truth of the matter is that co-operation of the Congress is essential operation of the American form of government.
Neither of the two can, as things stand today, is Chief Executive and the Congress is essential for successful

Neither of the two can, as things stand today, hope to "boss" the other indefinitely. Neither has enough powers under the Constitution to do so. That was the idea. The writers of the Constitution planned it that way. They created checks and balances to keep each dependent to some degree on the other.

The implications of the President's oath of office, swearing to uphold the Constitution, are that he will work co-operatively with Congress. A good many Presidents have forgotten this fact. Their squabbles with the law-makers have done the country much harm, and themselves and their parties as well.

What makes such a tug-of-war all the more certain to result in confusion and disruption of the country is that, although the President (being one voice, with abundant means of publicity) usually has somewhat more influence on the public than the hundreds of Congressmen and Senators, nevertheless Congress has more power under the Constitution than the President

Congress passes the laws. It imposes the taxes to run the government. And moreover, although it has been years since the idea has been seriously considered, Congress can in a showdown, impeach and remove a President from his office.

Congress has been the balance-wheel in this country for the past ten years or so-ever since it stopped playing messengerboy for the New Dealers in the Executive Branch.

A host of public problems can be settled quickly and efficiently when there is a man in the White House who will play teamwork with Congress

What makes one think that Governor Dewey is such a man? Several things. One, of course, is the friendly, co-operative attitude he has taken as Republican nominee with the Republican majorities during the present Special Session. This is a most hopeful omen.

But there are other signs as well. For instance, reports from New York indicate that the Governor, in his relations with the State Legislature, has displayed precisely the same sort of co-operation as is so badly needed at

He has consulted with legislative leaders, worked out the details of his program with them, listened with an open mind to their advice, and avoided anything in the nature of a collision between these two co-ordinate branches of the State government Further, Governor Dewey is a lawyer. He would be the first practical attorney to sit in the White House for nearly forty years. We have had a number of Presidents who had little respect for legal principles for the very simple reason that they didn't know enough about them to understand them.

Governor Dewey should not suffer from that defect. He is educated in the law, trained in it. He understands its principles and its theories. For several years, he was a highly success ful officer in the enforcement of the law. The principles of government under the law (and the Constitution is the basic law of

These are some of the outstanding reasons why the entry of Governor Dewey in the White House next January can be expected to open up a new era of co-operation with Congress and of law and order, with "liberty and justice for all.
